

Welcome to the new website of Labour International, powered by WordPress and hosted by Labour UK!

We hope you like the design, it is a new template created for Labour UK. We think it is much cleaner and more modern than our previous website.

We have transferred all the useful, static information from the old site, so you will find in here our Rules, the composition of the LICC, contact information etc. We have also included some history about how LI was formed and the structure of LI, how it links to Labour and the NEC, plus how many members we have and where they are. The recent LI review showed us that many members wanted more information about LI and details of how to get involved, whether socially or actively campaigning. Or both! You will find links to other LI websites and FaceBook pages, Jos Gallacher's reports and requests for contributions from the National Policy Forum, details of the Branch development drive, links to campaigns, including Open Selection which is currently a hot topic, plus various news articles from the Press and published opinions from members. And events, of course, including information about Conference 2018, which is looming!

We have plans for more development, but we are presently restricted to some extent by the Labour template. For example, we would like to build a proper calendar page, showing all that is going on month by month, including important deadlines not to be missed! We would like a member's area, requiring a log in, where agendas, minutes, newsletters and all manner of things pertaining to members can be found, but not made available to the browsing public. We hope to develop these in the near future because the beauty of WordPress is that it is open software and there are many 'plugins' which we can utilise. Once we have gained the confidence of LPHQ!

So we hope you will find the new website more lively and interesting. Of course, it will not replace the discussion element of FaceBook, but we would like to think that it will, in future, be the first port of call to find information for existing members and will attract new members to our CLP.

Please let us have your feedback including what you would like to see in future. Thank you!
